Old Kent County Jail. Until 1872, there were four islands in the Grand River just below the rapids. Three of them proved to be useful building sites for the growing city by filling in shallow channels that once separated them from the shore. Island No. 2 became the site of the Kent County Jail in 1872, called at the time "the handsomest edifice . . . owned by the county." Photo in Lorensen and in Morris 425.
